Investment Manager Commentary

Global and domestic sentiment were conducive for the bond market. On the global side, the market welcomed progress in US - China trade negotiation following positive comment from both US and China administrations. US central bank also maintained its patient monetary policy stance, supporting risk-on sentiment for Asia market. On the domestic side, Bank Indonesia maintained its benchmark rate at 6% and signalled that benchmark rate is near its peak, indicating a less aggressive stance for BI this year. However, Indonesia USD bonds were under pressure in February due to US Treasury yield that went up from 2.63% to 2.71%. Portfolio performance in February was supported by allocation in medium-short tenor bonds.
