Investment Manager Commentary

The equity market posted positive performance in February driven by expectation of global economic recovery as vaccination began globally and the plan of additional USD1.9 trillion from the US. However the market turned volatile at the end of February as concerns of inflation could spike in the US that can force The Fed to tighten its monetary policy sooner. However Fed Chair Jerome Powell dismissed the speculation through several statements in February, where The Fed sees inflation pressure remain low as unemployment remain high, indicating that The Fed will remain accommodative until the economy significantly recover. Portfolio allocation in health care and communication services contributed positive attribution, meanwhile allocation in energy and consumer discretionary contributed negative attribution to performance.
