Investment Manager Commentary

The Indonesia bond market experienced further correction as The Fed turns far more hawkish due to mounting concern over rising US inflation that hit the highest figure in the past 40 years. Globally, aside from the Fed tightening monetary policy, Russia - Ukraine geopolitical tension remains as negative sentiment as the spillover effect may disrupt global supply chain. There are also concern that zero-covid policy in China may affect global supply chain and growth outlook. From the domestic factor, the sentiments are mixed. On the positive side, S&P Ratings revised the outlook to Stable from Negative and affirms the Sovereign Credit Rating of the Republic of Indonesia at BBB. In addition, the liquidity remains ample as the credit growth on February remain low at 6.33%. On the other hand, the negative sentiment triggered by the concern over rising domestic inflation. On monetary policy, Bank Indonesia has decided to hold the policy rate at 3.50%. Yield curve rose across the tenor with the short-tenor bonds rose higher than the mid-tenor and long-tenor bonds.
