Investment Manager Commentary

Indonesia stock market was slightly down, underperforming the regional, emerging market and the global market. While the Indonesian bond market strengthened significantly, the 10-year government bond yield fell from 7.51% to 6.91%, in line with the decline in the UST yield which had touched the level of 4.21% to 3.61%. Market sentiment was mainly driven by lower-than-expected US inflation of 7.7% YoY (consensus 7.9%, previous month 8.2%) making expectations of less aggressive central banks, lifting global sentiment and bringing back foreign fund inflows. Referring to the new statements from central bank officials, The Fed Chairman Jerome Powell sees the possibility of reducing the size of the rate hike starting this December. The economy reopening and high corporate earnings growth will provide supports for Indonesia equity market.
