Investment Manager Commentary

Relatively positive financial reports and optimism about the Fed's interest rate policy, which began to appear successful in controlling inflation, led to strengthening in global stock markets. Several economic data releases such as the manufacturing sector, services, consumer confidence and property showed a decline where this condition is expected to make the Fed more accommodative. IMF warned of a deteriorating outlook for the global economy caused by high inflation, the Russia-Ukraine conflict and a slowdown in China. The IMF cut its forecast for global economic growth next year to 2.7%, from previous estimates of 2.9% in July and 3.8% in January.
