Investment Manager Commentary

Asian stock markets recorded negative performance overshadowed by the Fed's hawkish statement which stated that further interest rate increases were still possible and high interest rates could last longer than expected. Investor pessimism about China's economy also adds to sentiment. China's trade data disappointed the market, where exports fell -14.5% YoY and imports -12.4% YoY, more than market expectations. Apart from that, China's inflation data for July contracted -0.3% YoY, while PPI contracted -4.4% YoY, indicating slowing economic conditions. Attention to China also increased after property developer Country Garden failed to pay coupon payments on its bonds, which increased pressure for distressed property sector. The monetary easing carried out by China's central bank was unable to lift market sentiment where the cuts were smaller than estimates. Portfolio allocations in the industrials consumer discretionary sectors provide positive attributions for performance, while allocations in the financials and IT sectors provide negative attributions.
