Investment Manager Commentary

The domestic bond market experienced a volatile movement on the back of rising 10Y UST yields to 4.35%. Indonesia bond market in August recorded negative performance. The volatility in the UST yields were driven by hawkish Fed statement deduced from the minutes of the Jackson Hole meeting which stated that additional interest rates hike was still on the table and rates could remain elevated longer than expected. In addition, the spike in the UST yields was triggered by the declining demand in the UST auction. Meanwhile Bank Indonesia held the interest rates constant for the seventh time in a row during its August meeting, in line with market expectations. BI believed that the current levels were enough to keep inflation within the targeted range for both this year and the next year. Yields on short tenors increased more than medium tenors.
