Investment Manager Commentary

Asia equity posted positive performance in December buoyed by expectation that interest rate cut is coming in 2024 as US inflation and labor data continue to moderate. The Fed's December FOMC forecast expects 75bps rate cut in 2024, more than previous forecast of 50bps rate cut. Majority of Asia market ended in positive as market sentiment improved especially in Taiwan, South Korea, and India. Technology sector was the key contributor as investors enthusiasm over AI continued to accelerate. Meanwhile China market was weaker as the market was disappointed with China's 2024 fiscal deficit target. The market is concerned that stimulus measures by the Chinese government may not be sufficient to spur growth. Portfolio allocations in healthcare and materials contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in industrials and IT contributed negative attributions to performance.
