Investment Manager Commentary

Indonesia equity posted positive performance in December buoyed by expectation that interest rate cut is coming in 2024 as US inflation and labor data continue to moderate. The Fed's December FOMC forecast expects 75bps rate cut in 2024, more than previous forecast of 50bps rate cut. On the domestic front, macroeconomic condition remain stable. Headline inflation was down to 2.6% YoY in November from 2.9% YoY the previous month. Government spending was higher in December at IDR616 Trillion, more than double the spending in November of IDR270 trillion. This is positive as higher government spending can trickle down to the economy. Meanwhile China equity was weaker in December as the market was disappointed with lower than expected fiscal deficit target, hoping for larger stimulus to support the economy. Portfolio allocations in consumer staples and financials contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in consumer discretionary and IT contributed negative attributions to performance.
