Investment Manager Commentary

Global stock markets strengthened supported by moderation in US inflation data which raised optimism that the Fed could raise interest rates more gradually. December inflation fell to 6.5% YoY, the lowest level since November 2021. Falling energy and goods prices were the main contributors to slowing US inflation. The market was also supported by expectations that a soft landing could be achieved in the US following better-than-expected 4Q economic growth, growing 2.9% QoQ annualized, better than expectations of 2.6%. In line with expectation the Fed raised interest rates 25 basis
