Investment Manager Commentary

Global equity markets posted positive performance in July as global market sentiment turned more optimistic. Lower than expected inflation and resilient economic data in the US raised hope that recession can be avoided. Positive sentiment in Asia also buoyed by more positive outlook on China following the Chinese government commitment to shore up the economy with new initiative to boost consumption. A more positive market environment also supported the technology sector in South Korea and Taiwan, driven by the ongoing enthusiasm for artificial intelligence. Portfolio allocation in consumer discretionary and IT contributed positive attribution, meanwhile allocation in materials and industrials contributed negative attribution to performance.
