Investment Manager Commentary

Asia equity market rebounded in November supported by expectations that The Fed has reached peak rate which led to better market sentiment, lower US Treasury yield, and weaker USD. The Fed held its rates steady at 5.25%-5.50% in the latest FOMC meeting and repeatedly delivering their message of being patient. Meanwhile, US economic data showed signs of slowing down that raises market expectation The Fed has reached its peak rate and potentially can pivot more accommodative in 2024. Majority of the equity markets in Asia posted positive performance in the month, with South Korea, Taiwan, and the Philippines posted the strongest performance. Meanwhile China equity market was volatile in November, failed to match the gains in the global market. Fears that stimulus measures by the Chinese government wouldn't be sufficient to spur growth and the ongoing real estate crisis also weakened sentiment towards Chinese stocks. Portfolio allocations in IT and materials contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in consumer staples and industrials contributed negative attributions to performance.
