Investment Manager Commentary

Asia equity fell in January as investors dialled back their expectation of aggressive Fed rate cut. A number of emerging data strengthen the narrative that The Fed will not rush to cut interest rates, with employment, manufacturing, and consumer sentiment data were better than expected. On the flipside, this also reinforces stronger view of soft landing in the US. Sentiment on the Asia market also affected by China's weak economic outlook and lack of potential stimulus from the government that could support growth. Meanwhile India equity fared better compared to rest of Asia equities, as negative sentiment on The Fed was offset by strong flow to India equities from foreign and domestic investors. Portfolio allocations in healthcare and IT contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in industrials and energy contributed negative attributions to performance.
