Investment Manager Commentary

Indonesia equity was positive in June despite of volatile global and domestic markets environment. Latest projection from The Fed in June indicate cautious stance and median forecast of only one rate cut this year. Meanwhile US economic data showed signs of moderation with inflation came lower and labor data softer that drove market optimism of more aggressive rate cut from The Fed. In the domestic market, Rupiah depreciation was the key focus amid seasonally high domestic demand for USD and uncertainty on Indonesia's fiscal outlook due to pro-growth program from President-elect Prabowo. Bank Indonesia maintains benchmark rate at 6.25% despite of weaker Rupiah, and stated monetary operation as key tool to stabilize Rupiah, while rate hike is seen as last resort. Portfolio allocations in materials sector contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in industrials contributed negative attributions to performance.
