Investment Manager Commentary

Indonesia equities were negative in May affected by weak Rupiah exchange rate, uncertainty on Fed monetary policy, geopolitical dynamics in the Middle East and sharp corrections of some highly speculative large-cap stocks. Amid the uncertainty foreign investors posted net sell of USD880.5 million in May. Market volatilities aside, Indonesia's economic indicator showed improvement, where inflation fell to 2.8% YoY due to lower food and transport prices. Foreign reserves also rose to USD139 billion in the month. Meanwhile Bank Indonesia maintained BI Rate at 6.25% as inflation lowers and Rupiah stabilize. The central bank saw the currency strengthening faster-than-expected and inflation remained manageable. The currency stabilized in the month supported by foreign inflows and weakening USD, concluded with a slight appreciation of 0.06% MoM. China economic data was relatively positive in the month with inflation, exports, and manufacturing data came in better than expected. Portfolio allocations in utilities and healthcare contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in materials and financial contributed negative attributions to performance.
