Investment Manager Commentary

The bond market was volatile in November, where Donald Trump's election as President was the key focus. Trump's election put pressure on Asian market due to stronger USD and concern of Trump's tariff policy. Trump's campaign rhetoric include raising tariff against China to 60% and universal tariff 10%-20% to other countries. Trump policies are seen as inflationary that could affect The Fed's rate cut outlook. The 10Y UST yields rose 16bps from 4.27% to 4.43% following the US election results announcement, but ended the month at 4.17% as The Fed cut rates by 25bps. Meanwhile, the 10Y Indonesia government bonds yield rose from 6.77% to 6.85%. On the domestic market, Bank Indonesia maintained BI Rate at 6% and emphasized its main policy focus is on Rupiah stability, citing risks from US policy changes under President Trump. Foreign investors posted net sell IDR13.07 trillion in Indonesia bonds, while yields rose across the tenor, with the 2-year bond rose the highest of 15bps.
