Investment Manager Commentary

Asia Pacific equities were varied in March, affected by escalation in US tariff and rising concern of US recession risk. Taiwan and South Korea equities were weaker in March as the market was concerned by uncertainty on US tariff could affect investment and demand for AI chip. Previously President Trump indicate possible tariff for semiconductors. Meanwhile, domestic-oriented countries such as India and Indonesia outperformed in the month. India equities staged a rebound in March following negative performance in January - February, supported by turnaround in foreign investors appetite to become net buyer and the central bank stance of potential further rate cut. Indonesia equities also rebounded following market correction in January - February. China economy showed resilience with retail sales and industrial production exceeding expectations. However, deflation fell to deeper territory in the month. Portfolio allocations in consumer staples contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in consumer discretionary was detractor to performance.
