Investment Manager Commentary

Asian equities delivered positive performance in August 2026, supported by continued optimism around AI spending, resilient technology demand, improving manufacturing activity, and constructive economic data across several markets. However, performance was uneven across countries and sectors. Investor sentiment remained anchored by strong AI-related capital expenditure from major US hyperscalers. Expectations for continued investment in data centers, semiconductor infrastructure, networking equipment, and AI supply chains supported technology-heavy markets, particularly Taiwan and South Korea. Manufacturing activity remained broadly resilient. Technology exports continued to outperform other categories, helping support export-oriented economies such as Taiwan, South Korea, and parts of ASEAN. While growth-related sentiment was constructive, market gains were partially constrained by concerns that the Federal Reserve could maintain a higher-for-longer policy stance. Comments from Fed officials during August kept investors attentive to inflation risks, resulting in higher bond yield volatility. Portfolio allocations in consumer discretionary contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in industrials contributed negative attributions to performance.
