Investment Manager Commentary

Indonesia financial markets were under pressure in October as market sentiment was predominantly influenced by the Fed's policy stance, The US midterm elections expectations, the MSCI reclassification announcement, and Bank Indonesia's monetary policy decision. The Fed paused its tightening cycle in October, keeping the fed funds rate unchanged at 3.75%-4.00%, while maintaining a hawkish stance. The Fed reiterated its data-dependent approach, with persistent inflationary pressures remaining a key focus. On the domestic front, the MSCI announcement dominated the market sentiment. The proposed reclassification of Indonesia from Emerging Market to Standalone Market status triggered broad-based negative sentiment, leading to a sharp equity market sell-off, rising bond yields, and a weaker Rupiah. To address Rupiah depreciation, Bank Indonesia (BI) maintained its policy rate at 5.75% while delivering a policy mix to support currency stability and domestic liquidity. Measures included raising the Deposit Facility Rate to 5.00%, cutting the reserve requirement ratio from 9% to 7%, and strengthening DNDF hedging incentives to attract foreign capital inflows. BI continued its path on lowering SRBI yields and reducing outstanding volumes to improve market liquidity. The 12-month SRBI weighted-average yield continued to trend lower, declining from 6.76% to 6.60%. Bond yield rose across tenors, led by the 5-year yield that rose +60bps.
