Investment Manager Commentary

Indonesia and China's stock markets faced renewed volatility throughout September, driven by rising US Treasury yields, a stronger US dollar, and expectations of tighter global monetary policy. The Fed raised its policy rate by 25 bps, in line with expectations, while maintaining a hawkish stance and signaling the potential for further rate hikes. The 10-year US Treasury yield rose to 5.28%, its highest level since 2007, amid concerns over inflation, higher interest rates, and elevated US debt levels. Bank Indonesia kept the BI Rate unchanged at 5.75% at its September meeting, with policy remaining focused on maintaining rupiah and inflation stability. September inflation edged up to 3.28% YoY from 3.19% in August, mainly driven by higher food prices, although it remained within Bank Indonesia's 2.5% ±1% target range. Economic activity indicators provided more constructive signals. The manufacturing PMI returned to expansion territory, rising to 52.4 in September from 49.8 in August, with output and new orders recording their fastest growth since February. The trade surplus widened to USD3.55 billion in August from USD122 million previously. Meanwhile, Chinese equities fell in the month amid concern on domestic demand weakness and the latest stimulus package that underwhelmed market expectation. Portfolio allocations in energy contributed positive attributions, meanwhile allocations in consumer discretionary contributed negative attributions to performance.
